

Justin Gillis is a reporter for The Washington Post who has covered the biotechnology industry for five years. After a career as a government and investigative reporter in Miami and Washington, he switched to the biotechnology beat in 1998, seeing it as one of the most intriguing, and potentially controversial, technologies for the future. He has closely followed the issues relating to pharmaceutical production in plants and animals.